Mary Louise Pratt is Silver Professor at New York University, where she teaches in the Departments of Spanish and Portuguese, and Social and Cultural Analysis, and is affiliated with the Center for Latin American and Iberian Studies and the Hemispheric Institute for Performance and Politics. She was formerly Olive H Palmer Professor of the Humanities at Stanford. Her research areas include Latin American literature since 1800; modernity and globality; postcolonial criticism and theory; language and globalization; women and print culture in Latin America; travel writing; literature and imperialism; cultural theory. She has published widely on these topics, and is best known for her book Imperial Eyes: Travel Writing and Transculturation (Routledge 1992, 2nd ed. 2007). She was President of the Modern Language Association in 2003 and currently sits on the Executive Council of the Latin American Studies Association. At UNM/SHRI she will be researching debates on language in the state-building process in New Mexico and Arizona.